

Wilde

As written by Nelf bitemen

First allow me to introduce myself. I am, Nelf Bitemen. I am the Head scholar of the Dascorie School of Higher Learning. I am the one who seeks to learn all that can be learned of the people and places in and around the kingdom of Dascorie. I know more of the peoples and places than anyone..... About the peoples and places found in and around the kingdom of Dascorie. That is I know more then anyone.....

If little is known about the Orc then even less is known about the Wilde. This Elven race is truly an enigma. They have a wisdom and knowledge beyond most men's understanding and at the same time a savage nature that is only matched by the Trolls and Gors in the unsettled lands.

Fortunately I have recently come from the unsettled lands and have personnel spoken with several of the Wilde, who do not like strangers in their woods. As is usually the case Gilt my traveling companion, found himself at knife point when I came into view of them. After several minutes of negotiations and a bottle of Dascorie's finest vineyard....or two. We came to an agreement and spoke for several hours with myself doing most of the talking. Gilt of course was.....let us say indisposed for the most part. Not to worry he is taller now.

They live in thatched wood huts and tree houses within the unsettled lands, and are careful not to over hunt or cultivate the land in which they live. For unlike Humans These Elves live in and among the wild. It is as much apart of them as they are of it. Therefore to upset that balance is to have chaos in their way of life, or so they believe.

The Wilde tend to wear skins and furs for most of their clothing, for they prefer to feel at home where ever they may go. Often times they will wear leaves or small twiggs on or in long braids of hair that dangle to the sides of their heads. There meaning is not known. Their boots....or shoes or..... also tend to be made of skins and furs. At times they will have tattoos on there faces mostly is different shades of blue or green. There meaning is also not known. We have seen.... that many who have ventured and stayed within the Out-homes, are quick to take up the dress and style of the people within.

Despite this the Wilde use more complicated means to forge weapons and armor. Their weapon of choice seems to be the spear and shield though the shields are small they are strong and are made from wood and hide. The armour they wear is made of skins, wood or metal or a combination of the three from what I have seen. Many tend to carry large bows made of a dark wood with fur rapped at the ends with leaves and twiggs dangling from them..

If anything, it seems that they have the knowledge and the ability to build grand cities, but not the desire. They seem to be right at home in the forests and prefer this life to anything a city could provide.

As far as anyone knows, no Wilde ever met has not been a Shade. They keep their distance from much of the human kingdom, but often venture into the Out-Homes.

The homes they tend to visit are usually on the outskirts of the realm though some have come deeper into the kingdom. Perhaps we shall find out more about this race as they visit the homes more.

Nelf Bitemen

Head Scholar of the Dascorie School of Higher Learning